

NOTES ON FORM FOR COLLECTORS

The attached chart and the notes which follow are meant to be informal supplementary guidance for filling out the Form for Collectors. For the most part they are drawn from discussions held by the Working Group; the few additions are designed to help with one or two of the more troublesome columns.

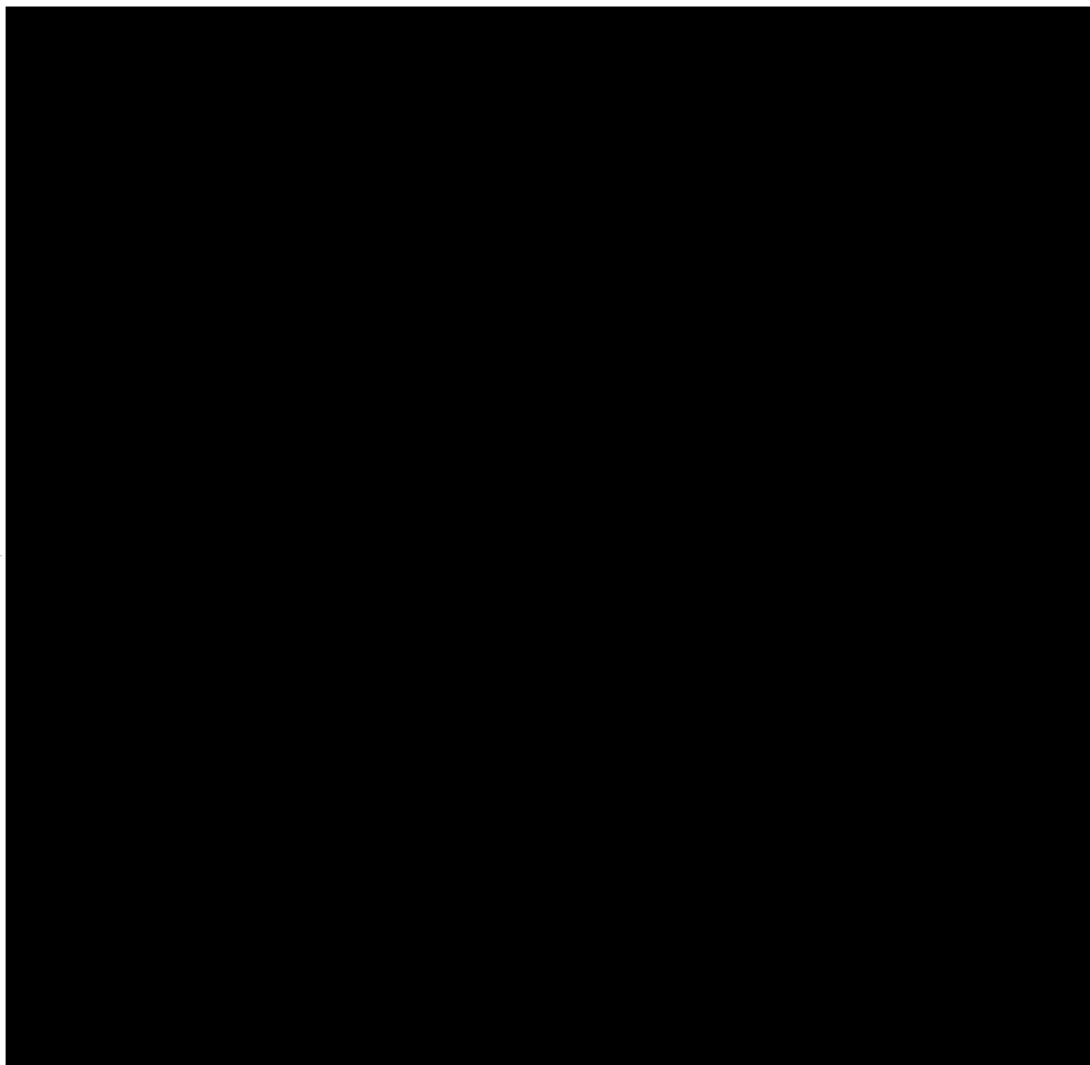

The chart reflects some of the different factors that will affect entries to the Form. It does so for four types of technical collectors for each of the Form's 16 columns.

The biggest single problem in filling out the Form relates to the availability of "necessary" data. To a considerable extent, this is a problem of dealing with uncertainty when there is less than a "desired" level of information. As long as enough information exists to make an estimate, however uncertain, the entry is possible. The extent of the uncertainty should be noted so that appropriate sensitivity tests and conclusions can be drawn. Where data do not exist, alternative means can be devised -- for example, as proposed for column (5) (below).

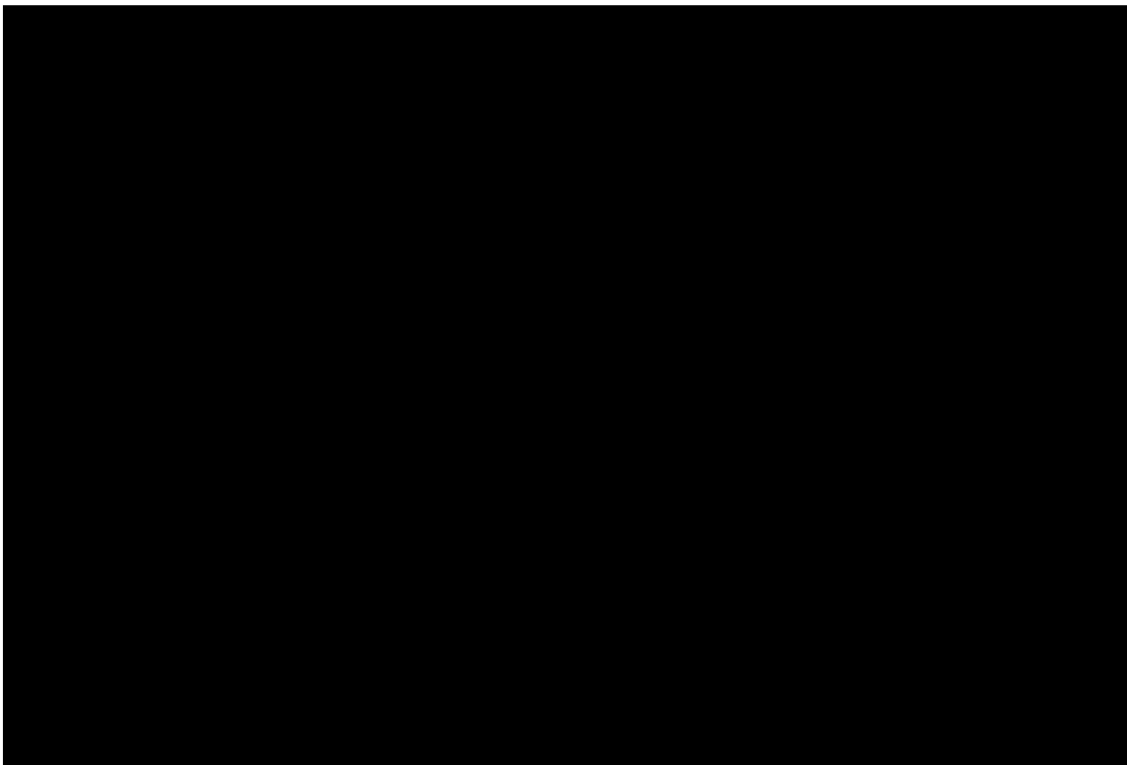

In addition to column (5), particular note should be taken of the chart with regard to columns (9), (13), (14), and (15).
